

Jersey Independent and Daily Telegraph - Tuesday 18 October 1859

EDITOR'S CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE REIGN OE RAGS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEPENDENT."

Sir, — I am grateful, as thousands of others ought be, for the exposure of the "Reign of Rags" in your last Saturday's impression. That article, Sir, together with what you promise in addition, ought to be printed in a separate form for the purpose of affording every man, whether his business be large or small, whether he master or man, the opportunity of procuring a copy for his guidance as to what notes he should take. Every man of business should have at least one copy suspended in his establishment. I tried early in the afternoon to get an extra copy but I could not succeed. I hope, therefore, you will repeat it in a future number, or, as I have suggested, in a separate form. The article has put the holders of Rags, called one pound notes, on the move, and instead of taking them to the issuers they are trying to shift the risk on to the shoulders of their neighbors. I have just had one presented to me, bearing the signature of Phil. Noel, payable — nowhere!

I am, Sir, yours, respectfully,
A BUSINESS MAN.